EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Shelterforce would be a household name for those who have a direct or indirect interest in the eradication of injustices prevalent in housing and community building.

Shelterforce, a nonprofit news organization with a 49-year history, has an incredible opportunity to grow over the next decade. Led by a dynamic and visionary CEO/publisher, alongside a nationally respected CEO/editor-in-chief, our organization is supported by a robust board committed to driving our mission forward, Shelterforce already has national recognition among community development professionals and reaches a wide range of professionals who work in the housing sector.

In a world with endless access to resources, Shelterforce would be a household name for those who have a direct or indirect interest in the eradication of injustices prevalent in housing and community building. Our robust platform would feature a multimedia center of information where users experience the convenience of picking from menus of content to find what is best suited for their needs at that time—from accessing in-depth articles to support legislation, to researching how people organized in the '70s, to a quick explanation of gentrification or redlining for first-year college students. We would meld rigorous accountability journalism with first-person storytelling and activist-serving explanatory journalism. This collection of trusted information would also serve as a place of community where hard discussions would continue to grow: from virtual to pop-up in-person conversations, communities of color would hear the hidden voices of their local leaders being elevated.

To grow into that future, Shelterforce will need to strengthen its base, build revenue, and build reach. By investing in a development director, Shelterforce will build the capacity to grow its individual and major donors, quadrupling total revenue in this area over the next five years. Donors will respond to the terrific story Shelterforce has to tell, if they are only asked.

Meanwhile, with the support of a marketing associate, Shelterforce will create products designed to attract new readers and listeners who work in or adjacent to the housing sector such as those in finance, public housing, and tenant activism. And the organization will offer services to support itself and key stakeholders, including editorial consulting.

These efforts will build Shelterforce's revenue and reach. But Shelterforce has the opportunity to do even more. We are at a moment when housing has become a top three issue for the general public. By creating strong partnerships with national and regional news outlets that are hungry for the kind of research and analysis Shelterforce can offer, Shelterforce will be able to leverage its strengths into a national presence.

The next five years will see Shelterforce mature into a powerful national platform for research and dialogue that brings us closer to our vision of realizing a just society where everyone lives in an equitable, thriving community.

METHODOLOGY

The goal of strategic planning is to support an organization in growing from where it is to where it can best flourish and make an impact. The first step of a strategic planning process is thus to assess where an organization is: what it does well and where it can improve.

We began by asking those basic questions of Shelterforce's stakeholders. Working with Shelterforce's CEO/publisher, CEO/editor-in-chief, and Strategic Planning Board Committee, we came up with a list of 85 stakeholders representing these groups: staff, board, funders, experts and advocates, CDC and CDFI administrators, tenant organizers and activists, peer news organizations and journalists, academics, government employees. We sent all of these 85 stakeholders a 9-question survey and conducted 28 in-depth interviews. In addition, we sent a slightly modified version of the survey to Shelterforce's readers and received 239 responses.

Using information gathered through these surveys and interviews, and with additional landscape research, we mapped Shelterforce's current and potential audience and created a SWOT. These materials were then brought to a Strategic Planning Task Force created by the Shelterforce board. The Strategic Planning Task Force met biweekly for three months to consider possible strategic directions and to design a strategic planning retreat.

A strategic planning retreat was held on Monday, February 13 for 21 participants, including the Shelterforce staff, board, and task force members. The focus of the retreat was to review the task force's recommendations and to develop specific objectives for achieving strategic goals. This report, which was in turn reviewed and edited by the Strategic Planning Task Force, is the outcome of that retreat.

FINDINGS

Surveys and interviews of Shelterforce stakeholders resulted in three key findings:

- 1 Do more of what you already do well. Stakeholders do not want the organization to make a fundamental change in its core content.
- 2 Widen audience for your stories through new products. Across all respondents we found a strong consensus that Shelterforce needs to broaden its audience and develop more ways to deliver the great content it already has.
- 3 Develop a stronger brand. One consistent finding was the Shelterforce brand promise is unclear. 56 percent of readers and 25 percent of key stakeholders identified Shelterforce as a housing resource. 32 percent of readers and 25 percent of stakeholders identified Shelterforce as a community development resource.

The SWOT analysis—based on these surveys but also on landscape analysis into peer publications—revealed similar threat and opportunities:

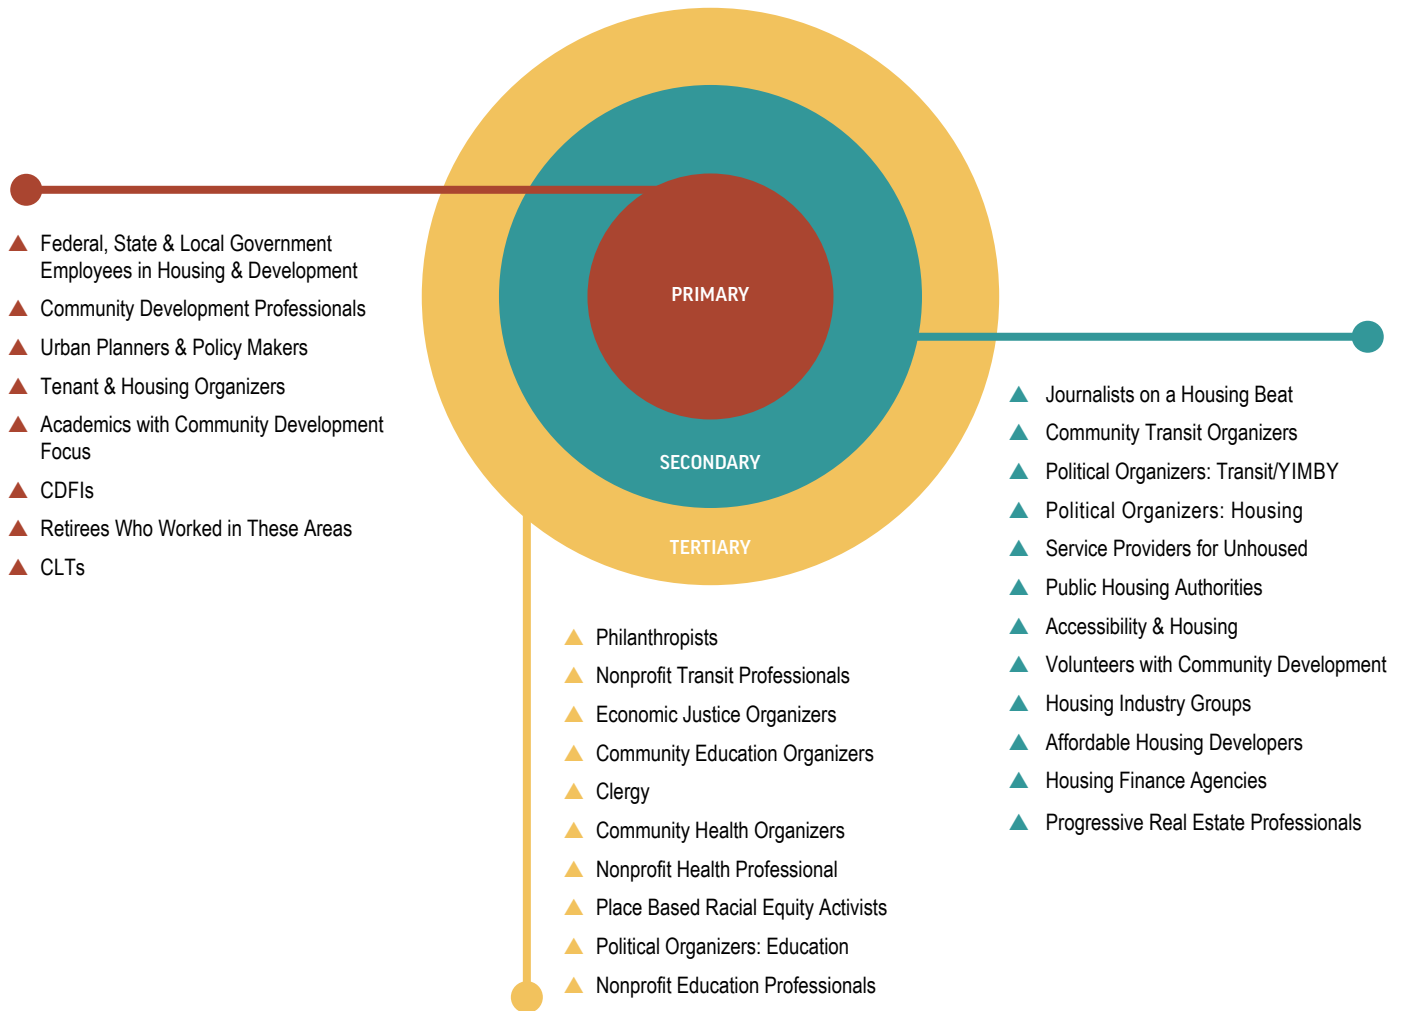

STRENGTHS <ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Core editorial is strong■ Well-known and loved in community development world■ Enthusiastic, happy staff and board	WEAKNESSES <ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Insufficient funds for editorial and marketing initiatives■ Not seen externally as being interested in partnerships or collaborations
OPPORTUNITIES <ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Opportunity to become a key player in national conversations■ Potential opportunity to grow revenue through new editorial products, such as webinars	THREATS <ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Lack of strong branding■ Lack of clear understanding of potential audiences■ Timeframe narrowing to become a key player in the national conversation on housing

5-YEAR BUDGET PLAN

This budget contains the assumptions for the initiatives in the plan. These numbers may and should change as the plan is implemented. The financial goal is first, to diversify income, creating significant revenue from donors and earned income; and second, to bring the budget to a sustainable $1.2 million per year.

Please note that the budget assumes enough profit in 2026 that Shelterforce will be able to add $100,000 to reserves. The organization should continue to see a net profit from 2028 forward, such that the organization will be able to add meaningfully to its reserves in subsequent years.
